The participants in the Newfield Public Library's autumn gingerbread contest gave the judges a very difficult task in trying to narrow the contest down to one winner.

We would like to congratulate

This house is creative and embraces the theme and is very visually appealing. They win!

This entry gets honorable mention for how the entrant embraced the theme and the creative use of the foods to make the display. We were tempted to warm our hands by the campfire while arriving at our decision.

This entry impressed the judges with the use of color and the creative shape of the structure. Well done!

The rainbow tiles and use of shape and color impressed the judges. We wonder if there is a moose living in the little house, or if there is a dog named Moose in there. The details like adding faces to the pumpkins is very charming.

The graveyard is a spooky and creative way to embrace the theme.

Honey! Honey is perfect in every season, and we love honey in the fall. The judges are amazed with the detail. How did you make these rocks?

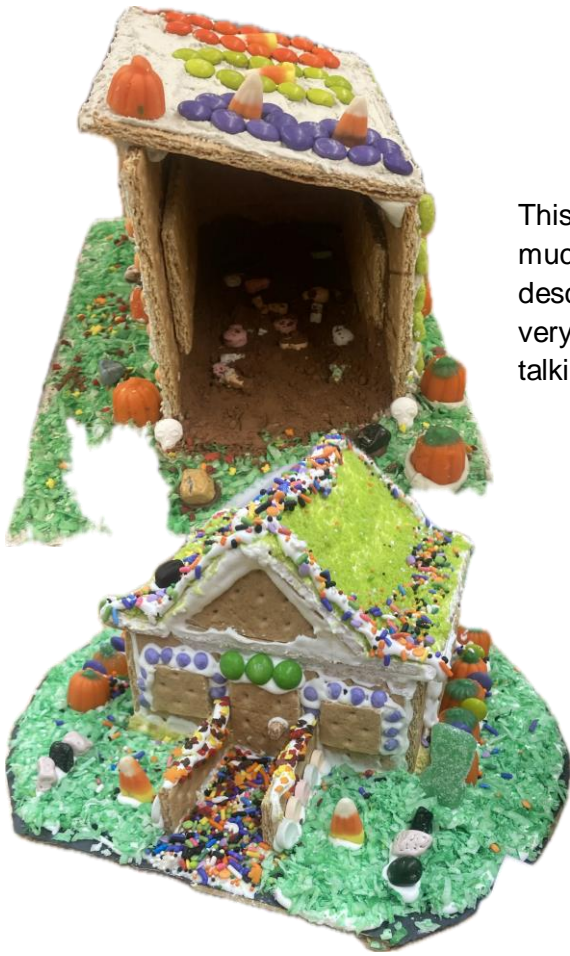

We love the cheerful, yet spooky interpretation of the theme. The use of a fully edible ground layer is so creative.

The judges loved the cheerful interpretation of the theme here. This reminds them of the beautiful weather we are having this season.

The judges loved the playful use of color to decorate this house to the nines!

This house caught our attention because there was so much detail, including a spooky shadow. The lovely description of the family working as a team made us very happy. The hard work paid off because we kept talking about this house!

This house!!! Honorable mention! Oh the painstaking detail in this house! We kept coming back to this house because the use of materials and the fine detail knocked our socks off.

This house is an inviting house that is not too spooky and has creative use of the materials with layers of color.
